The Beil monopoly has charged all the way from $60$ to $250 a year rental for its instruments, never selling one, and charging immensely for territorial rights to local companies. But the new company will rent instruments at $2$ a month each, or will sell them outright to local companies, who will be charged very moderate prices for territorial rights. The new Company has offices in the Produce Exchange annex.

This new telephone is exceedingly simple. It is called the "Phoenix." It has no batteries nor electrical appliances, and, therefore, no carbon transmitter. It is a magneto-telephone in its simplest form.

The simplicity of this telephone is illustrated in a desk phone no larger than a paper-weight, for connections with other rooms in the same building, useful for hotels, institutions, factories and the like.
